

StraTechos Stylesheet

1. ST intends to publish original research that is opinionated, yet rational, informative, yet fast-paced, unique in analysis, yet displaying a good knowledge of previous seminal work done in the area. In any topic that is approached, kindly provide what the dominant understanding on the issue is, any major alternate view/s that exists as well as why the author's take is different/adds to the understandings/s already existing.
2. ST hopes to attract a niche group of readers connected to the IR field – be it policy makers, academics, analysts or national security experts. However, by bringing an interdisciplinary outlook to matters of strategy and politics, ST also intends to reach a wider audience beyond this group. Hence avoid jargons like the plague and explain in simple terms the use of any specific concepts/theories.
3. Limit overly complex language as far as possible. Keep sentences short, crisp and matter of fact. A major focus of Trivium is to simplify academic research in social sciences for the benefit of the larger masses. A hypothetical article on Artificial Intelligence and its potential impact on decision making would hence need to be easy enough for a layman to understand.
4. It would be best to begin with the author's key argument/take, explain the dominant and alternate views and then rationally-unpack the author's unique take within this larger context. The first paragraph/s should give a reader an understanding of what is the author's take and the final paragraph/s should re-emphasise the same while adding why said take is justified. While this is not a hard and fast rule, adhering to this sort of a style shall make the acceptance of unsolicited articles easier.
5. While Trivium is a registered think tank in India, the target audience for the website is not geographically-determined. Hence, kindly refrain from using "us", "our", "we" etc to refer to a nation or nationality. An article on "India's national interest" is just that, not "our" national interest. Please ensure that any author bias on account of citizenship/affinity for any state/region is minimal.
6. Most importantly, please refrain from using AI in writing articles. The use of AI for fact-checking and general research is permitted, as is the use of grammarly or other such writing tools, but make sure what you write is in your own words (or cited as required for concepts or block quotes taken from any published material).
7. Citations are not provided in the manner of how research articles are printed in journals. Being a magazine and on an online platform, the style of attribution that would be followed in all sections would be using hyperlinks to articles/news pieces from across the internet.

8. If footnotes are needed to explain complex concepts, kindly try to limit the number of such additional content provided outside of the flow of the article. Certainly not more than 1 such footnote per 400 words of article text.
9. Authors able to provide images or infographic elements along with their manuscript submission will get a quicker response from the ST team. However, please make sure that you have the commercial rights for using the same and provide clear picture comments (text description) and related attribution details.
10. ST functions on a Creative Commons CC BY-NC license. As such, Trivium holds the intellectual property of the final print of all articles published on the StraTechos website. However, Trivium is a think tank dedicated to disseminating useful information to as wide an audience as possible. Hence, we are more than glad to provide re-publication rights to authors and other websites/magazines etc. All we ask is you approach us for permission beforehand and provide clear attribution to the website (first published on) when the matter is re-published. Kindly do not reproduce any content from the website without prior permission.
11. There shall be stringent fact-checking done on all articles and an authenticity/originality check shall also be done. Kindly refrain from submitting plagiarised work to ST. We shall certainly take note and the author will be blacklisted in our internal database. Future submissions from such authors will be heavily scrutinised before acceptance.
